MOMENTS TO REMEMBER

ELEMENTS THAT CAPTURE THE SPIRIT OF THIS YEAR'S CONFERENCE.

Unity MUN began with the idea that youth today are the leaders of tomorrow, and that empowerment starts with giving young people a voice. Our goal is to provide a platform for youth to collectively convene, engage in constructive dialogue, become critical thinkers and learn the art of diplomacy. By creating simulations of real-world international issues, we push our delegates to become global decision makers themselves, learning to be compassionate, thoughtful, and problem-solving through empathy and cultural understandings. At Unity MUN, we facilitate the growth of confident, informed, and empathetic leaders who will fight for a more equitable, peaceful and inclusive world.

At the recent AISM session, delegates dove into the pressing issues faced by India's gig workers, including app-based drivers and delivery partners. These workers often struggle with low wages, lack of social security, and no formal job protections despite their significant contribution to the economy.

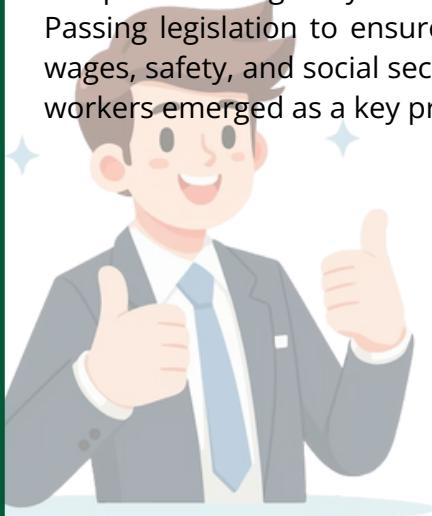

The discussions were intense and covered many angles. Saurabh Kirpal stood out by proposing stronger work contracts and a proper social security system tailored for gig workers. Finance Minister Nirmala Sitharaman also showed a genuine interest in pushing for policy reforms and fairer tax regulations that could benefit these workers.

However, not everyone was focused on worker welfare. Ashneer Grover claimed prioritized business growth, which led to criticism from other delegates who felt that workers' needs were being discarded.

Although the committee agreed on the urgency of improving gig workers' conditions, finding common ground proved difficult. Much of the debate turned into a blame game, with delegates pointing fingers rather than collaborating on solutions.

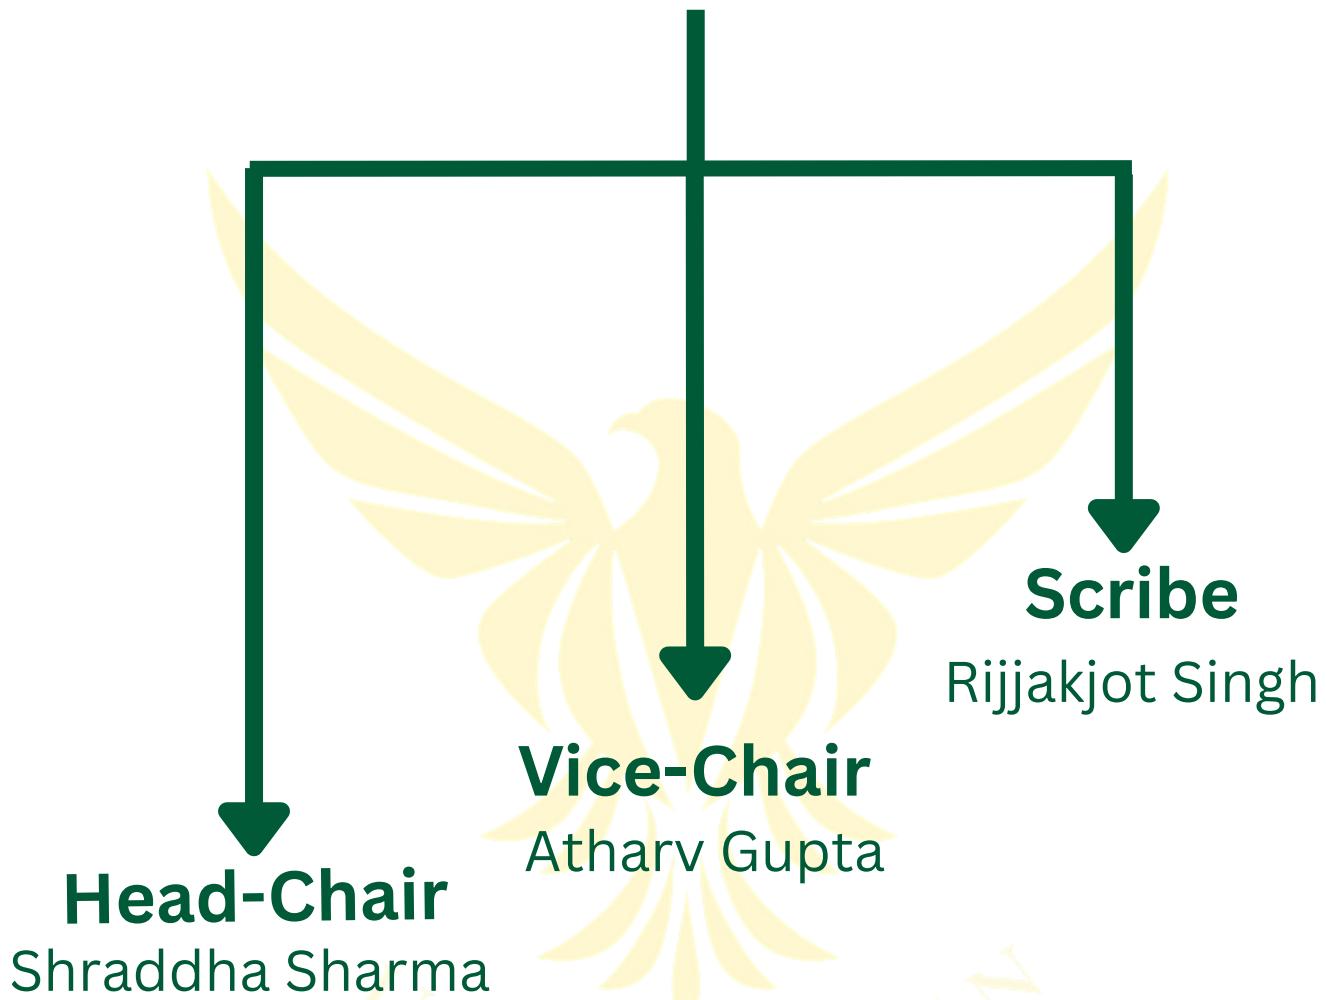

In conclusion, there was a shared call for establishing tripartite committees involving the government, workers, and platform companies to regularly discuss policies. Passing legislation to ensure minimum wages, safety, and social security for gig workers emerged as a key priority.

The day began with the Roll Call and Opening Speeches, outlining the exciting elements of the day. Although some of the most notable delegates, including Rahul Gandhi and Prime Minister Narendra Modi, were not in attendance, the rest of the assembly was eager to create the fun and excitement that this committee might highlight.

With excitement and energy building, everything came to a head when Akhilesh Yadav gave a stinging Point of information (POI) against Anil Deshmukh. While the badgering fell by the wayside in an opening counter from the Chair, Yadav had obviously researched and had lively, serious rhetoric in his arsenal and was prepared to engage in, and respond to, a serious debate and serious counterpoints, showcasing the seriousness in which the delegates were conducting themselves.

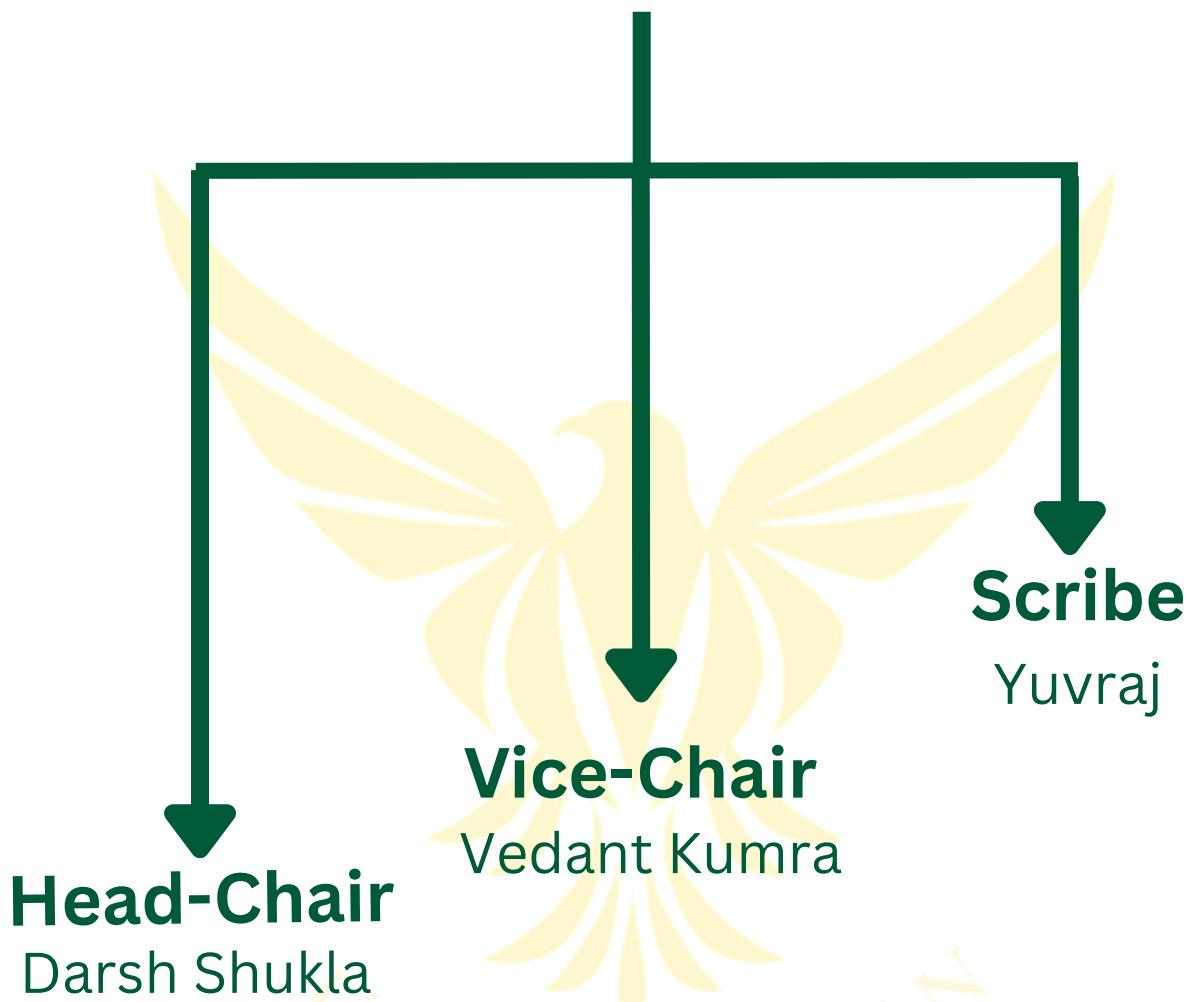

The conversation shifted from a serious debate to lighter moments of humour from time to time. When the feedback for the Executive Board sessions was almost over, Shashi Tharoor humorously remarked that some of the speeches resembled hints of ChatGPT, and knowing that even in a serious committee, you have to have some fun. The Chair struck a perfect balance, directing the debate but allowing the delegates to debate freely, ensuring that they heard all the arguments and counter-arguments.

Delegates submitted and received many POIs - orally and via regular and substantive chits, and the Chair encouraged POIs from all the delegates, all of which were received with diplomatic respect.

France called for a 20 minute unmoderated caucus, which carried by an overwhelming vote. In the unmoderated caucus, delegates were workshopping the next potential topic to call for the moderated caucus under the agenda, and there was general consensus to move on topic of "Deliberation on the Need for Cybersecurity Frameworks and Laws Regarding the Privacy of Individuals."

At the next moderated caucus, impactful interventions came from the Marshall Islands and Luxembourg, highlighting small jurisdictions concerns about their vulnerability regarding cybersecurity, even when they may not have many resources.

While delegates diverged on the specific format of these frameworks, one thing that was consistent with all delegates, was that there is a need for more global action on privacy and measures to protect individual privacy.

In a moderated caucus on "Promoting international cooperation in protecting digital rights and advocating for the unrestricted flow of information," delegates grappled with the competing aims of free online space and national security. India, Australia, South Korea, Egypt, New Zealand, Estonia, the UAE and the UK saw a need for a balanced approach and noted examples of this balance: UAE's hosting UNESCO's 3rd World OER Congress and UK's Online Safety Act. Japan, Italy, USA, Finland, Canada aimed for minimal censorship with focused on transparency and accountability whereas China and Russia were adamantly focused on internet sovereignty and preserving national interests. While there are differences and varying approaches, the space found some common denominators on global cooperation which included secure data exchange methods, digital rights coalitions, multilateral forums equitable access and valid safeguards on that access.

THROUGH THEIR LOOKING GLASS

WATCH AS THE PRESS LEAVES A STARK REMARK ON THE UNHRC

Spotted: Global scapegoats dressed as politicians discussing 'State Surveillance' and passing responsibilities. Fester your seatbelts, this tea is boiling hot.

The most salient incident transpired right across when the Chairperson woke up, stirred the pot and decided to question every other delegate, whether it was the delegate of China being questioned on its hypocrisy, Germany being pointed on its official surveillance or The Marshall Islands being told "just stop speaking delegate". The delegate of Luxembourg, when started proposing solutions in their GSL, was pointed out by the Dias if their government themselves follow the talk they propose, "What about the watchdogs your own government put on its people, the Amazon case of 2025 when 400 million databases were exposed?", the delegate stayed hush in this matter and the vice chair commented, "continuing anyways". The Chair then reminded the delegate of Canada about how their own Force is promoting the development of facial recognition for prominent meetings which hampers the accountability of government and swifts data leaks, how would you like to clarify that", to which the confident' delegate said, "would not like to answer this sorry". All in all, the dias is the kind of chair who'll let you speak, but if your speech has more filler than content, be prepared for a feedback session that starts

BREAKING NEWS

BRINGING VOICE TO THE SILENCE STITCHED INTO ETHNIC FRACTIONS

The delegate of Luxembourg delivering their controversial style statement

What began as a confused discussion swiftly led contentious debate about sovereignty, security and responsibility that held serious complications. The ride of spice was seen when the delegate of Luxembourg was attacked by the delegate of Mexico, China, India and USA on its controversial statement, "No other country but Luxembourg has successfully adjourned all the unnecessary privacy invasion on its citizens...", this unshed clash of arguments in the committed and the formal GSL soon turned into worse than an unmoderated caucus, successfully playing the part of a real Parliament.

The next quote worthy moment came right away, when the delegate of Luxembourg was yet again attacked by the delegate of Pakistan in its POI, "To highlight Luxembourg's pivotal role as a data haven, where massive amounts of personal information from around the world are stored, raising uncomfortable questions about how much control Luxembourg really exerts over that data and to what end, what do you have to say in this?". Luxembourg stayed hush, which was followed by the Vice Chair "Good discussion delegates"

Capturing the Essence of AIPM Delegates targeted in committee they don't belong to

All India Stakeholders meet

Nirmala Sitaraman advises AIPOs to make his next move on gig workers.

At the First AIPM committee session, delegations are intensely focused on 8G worker protection, quicker adoption of Article 19 of the Constitution to stress freedom of association. The room is charged as CEOs, rarely do they point fingers at government action. Meanwhile, government representatives make up rhetoric, surprisingly targeting ViraKalyan accusing him of distracting attention from policy failures. This battle game, set against the 8G economy debates, underlines both, India's modern labour issues and the political theatrics that often accompany them. The debate ignited around the practical challenges 8G workers face - low wages, long hours and a lack of social security and benefits, all exacerbated by the rapid expansion of the 8G economy in India. Delegations cited Article 19 of the Indian Constitution, arguing that the fundamental right to practice any profession should guarantee safe spaces for 8G workers.

Happenings & How(s)

By Aadnya Jain, AIPPM

The committee was set into motion with the Roll Call and the Opening Speeches. Amid the excitement and enthusiasm, it was revealed that Rahul Gandhi hadn't even joined the session! Perhaps he had caught cold feet. Those same cold feet also affected our honorable Prime Minister, Narendra Modi himself. To settle his nerves, the Chair decided to give him a pep talk which seemed to work.

Many others had not joined the session, but the delegates who were present made up for the lack of strength in the committee with their own participation.

Time seemed to mostly pass by uneventfully until Akhilesh Yadav attacked Anil Deshmukh with a fiery POI. However, it soon backfired as the Chair began to question some of Akhilesh's statements. But the delegate later made a comeback by delivering a passionate and well-researched speech.

Afterwards, during the Executive Board's feedback session friendly chats ensued. Among this exchange of words, Shashi Tharoor brought up the use of ChatGPT.

The motion raised and passed was to give speeches on the topic of "Deliberation on Article 142 of the Indian Constitution and the Judicial Appointments Process, with Special Focus on the Collegium System".

Anvind Keyhial delivered a heartfelt speech evoking emotion in the heart of the common man, living up to the name and spirit of his party. He suggested a constitutional amendment that will clearly define the role of the judiciary and legislative in order to establish a "constitutional laksman rehbar". This made the Executive Board raise their eyebrows as they questioned the implications if such a solution were to be implemented.

When the floor was opened for POIs, Dr. Subramanian Swamy accused Keyhial of thinking of the executive, legislative and judiciary as unequal to each other. Keyhial

Not-so-moderated Caucus

With the small but certainly not insignificant intervention of a fun dance, singing and poetry session, followed by lunch, the delegates were energized and ready to tackle the beginning of their Moderated Caucus.

AIPM debates better rights for gig workers

Leaders clash against each other, but some offer real solutions

Keva Patel
All India Stakeholders meet

The AIPM delegates deliberated on ways to enhance the rights of gig economic workers, including apprenticeship contracts and a national social security system for gig workers. Their partners. The goal was to talk about social benefits and legal protection for these workers, who frequently face challenges like job security. However, there was a lot of disagreement and finger-pointing among the delegates during the meeting.

In summary, the committee emphasized the pressing need to establish tripartite committees with representatives from the government, workers, and employers to facilitate regular policy discussions, as well as to pass legislation guaranteeing workers' rights, social security contributions, and minimum wage. Their conversations are essential because despite their enormous economic contribution, India's gig workers still experience instability and discrimination.

Instead of co-operating, the majority of delegates spent their time pointing fingers at others. As a result, many topics remained in India, gig workers' rights will eventually be granted through a collective agreement. Nirmala Sitaraman and Saarthi Kirpal appear inclined to bring effective solutions for the gig economy, but any final agreement will require cooperation from all parties.
